

Doris Marlin

Awareness, Education and Engagement is the best way to turn the Climate Collapse around. I'm a believer that building relationships and focused energy will achieve success at local level and branch outward to in other economic sectors, and inward to lifestyle changes. Attending the Climate Talks as a UUA Observer in Paris, Morocco and Poland convinced me that local engagement is the catalyst for broad, bold climate action and fundamentally to justice.

Doris Marlin

- Has been UU since 1985, currently a member of All Souls Church UU in Washington DC
- Has an academic background in Water Resources and professional background in Environmental Project Management.
- Began paying attention to Global Warming in 1991 while in graduate school.
- Began a journey towards understanding Social Justice as a peace activist and President of Northeast Florida multi-Faith Wage Peace during the early years of the 2nd Iraq War.
- Began understanding our challenged democracy as a new Florida resident when the 2000 election unfolded, and 5 Americans decided the U.S. presidency.
- Spent 35 years collaborating directly with local, state, and federal agencies and organizations to solve community / regionally -based environmental challenges – and seen the spectrum of good to bad politics, money, and judgement.
- Is now the UUMFE Lay Leader for the Create Climate Justice National Campaign, Strengthen Local Climate Commitments, SLCC